It is the year of the Lord 1554, the Time of the Plague. The town of Ferrara, in Italy, is deluged by the Inquisition's spies, which are trying to find all Protestant, Lutheran or Calvinist heretics. Every dwelling, no matter whether the palace of the noble, or the hovel of the meanest laborer, in which any inmate was imagined to be Protestant, or even to favor the Reformed religion, had, through the agency of spies, a perfect continuity established between it and the Holy Office. Not infrequently these spies were to be found among members of the family itself, especially the younger ones. The civil law has no more power; the public worship has been abolished and declared penal by the ecclesiastical courts. Este Palace, the house of the Duchess Renée, becomes an oasis for the Protestants after the Duchess renounce the Catholic faith.

Bernardino Ochino, ex-Capuchin Friar, ex-Confessor to the Pope, ex-General of the Order of the Capuchins, auto-declared himself a Reformer after an animated debate with Calvin. In the middle of this turmoil, he comes to Ferrara to seek the help and the protection of the Duchess.
